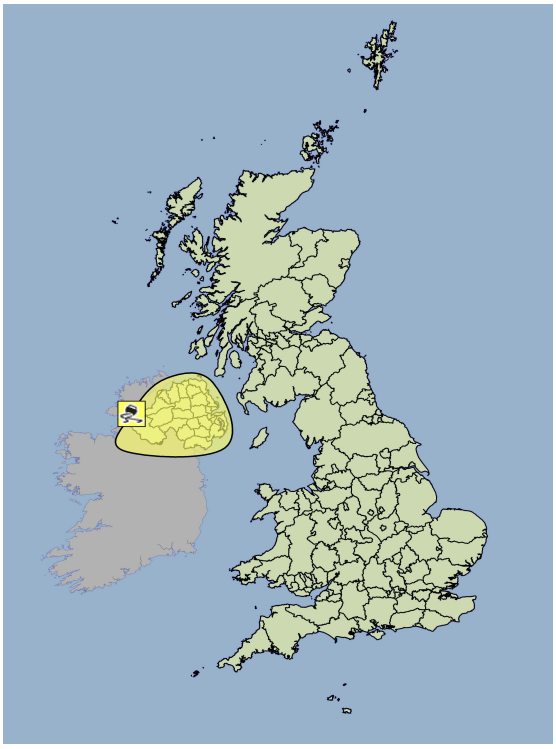
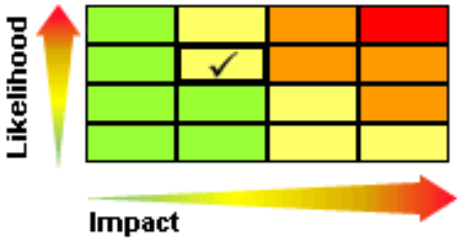
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An active frontal system will cross Northern Ireland in the early hours of Tuesday clearing eastwards by dawn. With falling temperatures accompanying clearing skies, icy stretches are likely to form, especially where earlier treatment may have been washed off.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 06:00 on Tue, 11th Feb 2014 until 10:00 on Tue, 11th Feb 2014

A band of rain, with snow on hills above 300 m, will spread east on Monday night clearing before dawn on Tuesday. As temperatures fall again, the public should be aware of the a risk of icy stretches, especially as earlier treatment may have been diluted.

This has been updated to correct the end time to late morning on Tuesday.
